Dear Sir/Madam,

Microsoft should be left alone to make as much money as it can make, and to dominate it's competitors as well as it can. In a free society, the most competent company will dominate, so instead of despising Microsoft for their success, I love and admire the company, and look up to Bill Gates.

I don't care about other computer/software companies. I choose Microsoft because they make great products at cheap prices. Even if they raise their prices later, they have a right to do it. I believe Microsoft has the right to sell in a way that pushes it's competitors out of the market. I do the same for the business I work for, to make more money. I respect the opposition companies that do better than ours. These better companies don't owe us their lives. If our business fails, we will take it and respect the opposition more.

I don't believe in self-sacrifice. I believe that if a company fails to compete against Microsoft, how dare that company improve it's market share by the musket of a gun; that is, through the government.

Let men live, not by permission, but by right.
